Sincerely hoping that the following lines may meet the eye of our Anglo-American Corinna—in Byron's, and her phrase-"here goes !"

FANNIA LOQUITUR.

Go it my tragedy!—thou'rt all excelling!—

To * And sell I know thou can'st not fail;

Tay newest oaths are fresh from the old boys's dwelling,
And written with the tip of Nicky's tail!—

With blood thou art saturate—of brimstone smelling;

Therefore, must have a run tho' "bugs" may rail—

Thou dost begin in fury—end in fuss—

Are not the first lines grantly written, thus?— Are not thy first lines grandly written, thus?-

Act I.-Scene 1. Arocky pass between two mountains, over whose thunder-blasted summits sixteen eagles are wheeling, soaring and [Enter-Corinna-Camilla-pushing before her a nine pounder, loaded with grape—she fires—sixteen of the eagles fall—the seventeenth floats grandly away, yelling defiance—his cries reverberate among the hills for several minutes.] CORINNA.

Ha! has one 'scaped me?-then am I agonized-

Ha! has one 'scaped me?—then am I agonized—
All!—all!—or now, be aye Corinna's war cry—
For her fierce sonl disdains a partial conquest.
(To the eagles,) Flap wings—bleed hearts—glare eyes—strain throats, and go to ****!

I am not satisfied—I pant for bliss:
Why what are hours uncontested?—nought.
Oh! I am sick of praise!—I long for curses!—
I long for hate!—oh I will do some deed—
To make earth tremble—heaven frown—and hell
Go it like fun and fury—for I'm sick
Of pottering on in the old humdrum way.
"Oh for a horse with wings!"—be night, thou saucy day!—
I'll pluck the old boy from his burning throne,
And se it myself upon it—

And seat myself upon it—
And while my flesh is frying to the bone— I'll write a sonnet!

From the N. Y. Spirit of the Times. THEATRICAL ADVENTURE ON THE MISSISSIPPI.

Dear P .- For want of something better, I send you the particulars of a recent adventure of mine on board the Ark Theatre, which you are at liberty to put into the fire or the Spirit of the Times.

In our journey up the river to the lower country, we arrived near evening in the village of V——, on the banks of the Mississippi. The first thing that attracted the notice of our little party on landing, was a huge play bill, announcing the tragedy of Hamlet, for that night's performance! A theatre in this place, said I to myself! In the name of all the Gods at once, who can the actors be? I went of course-to the play .-The theatre (or Ark) was of itself a novelty, being erected upon an ordinary flat-boat, or as Paulding terms it-"A Kentucky Broad Horn," on board of which the entire corps dramatic-managers, actors, musicians, carpenters, supernumeraries and scene-shifters, live, mingle and conglomerate in one delightful heterogenous mass. Here were music, madness and moonshinephilosophy, poetry, and performances - comedy, tragedy and farce, and all going by water-well may this be termed the "March of Intellect."

The stage was a little platform raised from the bottom of the boat, and the accommodations for the natron the maritime Drama, resembled somewhat the pit of a country play-house. Boxes there were none, and a ticket to the gallery was a "deck passage" to the play. The orchestra, after that of the Bowery, in Gotham. was inimitably recherche, consisting of a fife, a triangle, and a bass-drum !-- on which was discoursed most eloquent music, as you may imagine. It was rare fun to hear them do "Hale Columby," and thereby "split the ears of the grumblers!" The black, one-eyed leader of the orchestra, aforesaid, and his aiders and ply to abettors, were located at the bottom of the angle formed by the pit and the stage. 'Tis not unfrequently the case that the "gentle musicians are expelled from their stations and obliged to mount the stage or the orchestra seats, from overt acts of trespass committed with malice prepense or aforethought, by what in the vulgate is termed river water.

The actors—what shall I say of them? Oh for a pen of flame to record their chilly merits, and warm their watery hearts. * * * * * * The play went on. The philosophic Dane strutted and fretted his brief hour upon a leaky flat boat on the tide waters of the Mississippi, before a very select audience (of some twenty-five individuals.) They pronounced it beautiful, and at any especial outbreak and tear of passion, verily, they lifted up their voices and cried aloud. We groaned in spirit and waxed wroth, at the posthumous murder of the ill-starred Shakspeare, and when the perturbed Dane ejaculated, "Alas, poor ghost !" the sound was truly an echo to our sense.

The performance proceeded without any interruption until Hamlet's celebrated soliloquy of "To be or not to be," etc. when not exactly understanding the matter, the motley auditors "cuddled together" (vide Fanny,) at one side of the theatre to discuss a "Gander Pulling" match that was to come off next day. This had like to have proved an overflow and given us a ducking, as well as poor Ophelia. In the midst of it out of the corrective band of the cor popped the carretty head of "the stage manager" from

"Look ere strangers," yelled he; "Trim the boat or you'll all go down! The water is squirtin' in on this ere side, purty particlar fast, I reckon, and the King and Queen can't bail it dry, any way they can fix it, nor Ophelia to boot! They've been at it, down in that are grave, there, like thunder, this half hour !"

This annunciation brought the natives to the centre of the boat in a circumstance less than no time. But the fair and unfortunate Ophelia—we could not divest ourselves of the idea of thy bailing out thine own untimely resting place!—to see thy truculent visage softened from the action of "heavy wet." When the burial did indeed take place, from the inexperience or awkwardness of the undertakers, the rope slipped from under the coffin, (for they had a coffin, tho' entre nous, it much resembled a painted old sugar box,) and I distinctly heard it fall, body and-but there was no soul-splash into the water. Farewell to thee, Ophelia-thou was murdered before, but now a double cruelty art thou doomed to suffer, in being consigned to a

Well, the King died-the Queen drank her poison as though she liked it-(by the way, we shrewdly suspected it to be nothing more than plain, unadulterated whiskey,)-Hamlet also, and Laertes gave up the ghost most heroically, and "the blanket fell amidst shouts of

During the lady's heart-i. e. a pound of the herb to half a pint of play some mischievous wag had cast off the fastenings that held the boat to her moorings and now, actors, N. B. I once knew a young demoiselle of genius, audience, theatre and all, were on their winding way to

> After great difficulty and more swearing, we succeeded in reaching the shore, with the positive certainty of resting for the night in the wilderness, or wending our way back to the village of V-, on foot-fully aware too, that if we escaped the Scylla of bog holes and cane brakes, we run equal hazard from the Charybdis of wild beasts and savages.

> I will not tire your gracious patience with the details of our tramp through interminable swamps and across muddy creeks. Suffice it to say that half the party lost their shoes and all their tempers, and that at about sunrise the next morning, a set of squalid, tired, bespattered and hungry wretches were seen entering the village, your humble servant among the number, all unanimously resolved, that if either was ever caught again by a bad company (of strolling geniuses) in a floating theatre, the way they individually deserved to be rode on a rail, decked in a suit of tar and feathers, was nobody's business!

LATEST FROM EUROPE.

Yesterday, the packet ship Albany, Hawkins, from Paris papers to the 25th of April, and the latter London papers of the 28th and Liverpool of the 1st of May .--N. Y. Gaz.

We find nothing in these papers of political interest, excepting the speculations of a French editor on the subject of the Treaty of Indenmity.

The cotton market was a farthing worse than it was at the date of our former advices.

It is stated that some difficulties had occurred in France, arising out of the passage of the American Indennity Bill-and that the King of France intended to send out General Bernard on a confidential mission to the American Government.

Three ships which arrived at Trieste from Alexandria, brought letters which express the greatest alarm respecting the frightful increase of the plague, not only in Alexandria, but in all parts of Egypt. At Alexandria, the number of deaths were from 200 to 210 daily. The greater part of the ships which were to take cargoes of cotton had suddenly left the port without waiting for their cargoes; of three ships that have arrived at Trieste, two are empty; the third, which had previously taken a cargo of cotton on board, was immediately ordered from Trieste to Venice, to perform some months' quarantine.

On the evening of the 2d April, there was another explosion of Vesuvius. The shocks were so violent that the five craters vanished, and were all united into one frightful abyss. Immense masses of rock were projected to a vast height, and fell like a tremendous shower on the ribs of the mountain. At Torre del Greco, and the environs, great fears were entertained; but the explosion was of short duration; and at one o'clock in the morning the mountain was

The Journal du Havre of the 25th says: "Commodore Elliott, of the American frigate the Constitution, arrived here this morning from Paris. It is believed that the Constitution will sail this evening, not to rally in the Mediterranean the American squadron, which it had orders to join in case the indemnity should not be voted, but to return direct to New York.

The London Globe of the evening of the 28th of May, gives extracts from Paris papers of the 25th, and copies the following from one of them:

The affair of the American Indemnity bill, always embarrassing as between the ministers and the chamber, has now become, it is understood, an apple of discord in the cabinet itself. It is no longer a mystery that the vote of money, coupled with the offensive condation appended to it by M. Valaze, of not making any payment till satisfaction was made by the President for the offensiveness of his Message, has failed altogether or propitiating the American Ambassador, who openly declares that such a vote is more degrading than a flat refasal to pay at all-for one would be a simple injustice, whilst the other is an insult. The report of Mr Livingston's being about to leave Paris has been strengthened, and the Havre paper affirms that he was expected at that port immediately. Commodore Elliott, upon his arrival, went straight on board the Constitution frigate, and weighed for Cowes to take in water, communication with the French shore having been so strictly prohibited during his absence, that the crew did not dare to send a boat off even for the necessary supply of fresh water. He was expected to return without delay and take the Ambassador on board. The bill itself had not yet found its way into the Chamber of Peers ; but as a special meeting of that assembly was summoned for Monday it was understood that it would be then brought before them.

Another paper says, Mr Livingston's baggage has quitted the American Embassy.

The Late Earthquake in Chili .- An arrival o Baltimore from Valparaiso, has brought papers from that place to the 18th of March. They contain mor particular statements relative to the late dreadful earth quake than have before reached us. Mr Leighton's Thrashing Machine attracte much attention in State street yesterday-this invention will prove as important to the Farmer, as the Cotto Gin has to the Manufacturer. When first arrested, he stated his name to be merely Samuel Putnam, but afterwards added Flint, which one of his Salem schoolmates stated to be his real name.

Of the three memoranda, found in Flint's pocketbook, one of them is a most singular document, and some extracts are subjoined, as illustrating the very extensive and systematic style in which he proposed to himself to carry on the pilfering profession. It is head-body may make without intinging upon his rights? For it is not even mentioned in his book as his—it was invented by his son in Albany, who gave me the recipe.

This only shows how a man, wanting in principle, blinded by the most vindictive passions of jealousy and avarice, can pervert and misrepresent a very simple circumstance with the hope to injure one whom he has chosen to consider his enemy.

The case of Mr Epsom is of the same complexion. Mr E. came to me while residing at Ballstown, N. Y., with a letter of introduction from a highly respected clergyman, recommending him as one of the most eloquent of lecturers on various subjects, particularly against infidelity. Samuel Thomson happened to be present, and immediately began a conversation with him on that subject, and as asual, soon got into a rage, and dared him to come to Boston and lecture against infidelity. The challenge was accepted—he did come to Boston—we came together—he took lodgings I know not where—I saw him but raiely afterwards. It is now said that he behaved ill at his boarding house—of this I know nothing at the time, and I know nothing now. Am I to be responsible for the ill-conduct of this man? It is too absurd to make it necessary to say another word on the subject.

I have thus disposed of all the charges brought against me by Samuel Thomson. Let us now see if we can account for his recent vindictive enonity after so many years of friendly intercourse. In attempting to do this, I may be obliged to touch upon character to his disadvantage.

Samuel Thomson is one of the most extraordinary men now living. Strong-minded, ignorant, degradingly avaricious, yet squandering thousands in litigation—jealous of his fame, and desirous that all patients cured by vegetable medicine should give him the sole credit, let the operator or practitioner be who he may or reside where he may—in short, in all respects, he is one of the most eccentric of men.

is one of the most eccentr, let the operator or practitioner be who he may or reside where he may—in short, in all respects, he is one of the most eccentric of men.

The Almighty, in his infinite wisdom, chose to make him instrumental of a most important discovery, [as he did of that most wicked of men, Henry the 8th, in destroying Popery) and he is now doing all in his power to circumscribe the benefit to be derived from it.

I have been for many years a practitioner of the Thomsoni-proschool, and have brought the practicable ashibition of the

I have been for many years a practitioner of the Thomsoni-tron school, and have brought the practicable exhibition of the remedies to a great degree of perfection. I have paid Samuel Thomson thousands of dollars for his medicine used in my practice and for rights sold on his account, and even after he revoked my agency I offered to purchase all I wanted, of him, and this was no triffing amount—but he utterly refused to supply me unless I signed a bond. I have always faithfully accounted to him for all I owed him. Myself and my brother were amongst the first successful introducers of the system into Boston, where we came at his earnest solicitation—and now, what is the occasion of his quarrel with me? It is this: now, what is the occasion of his quarrel with me? It is this: Instead of going on as we have done for years, he now requires me to sign a bond with a penalty of 5000 dollars, of such an

All that Samuel Thomson can say or do will be of little avail in discrediting my house and practice. The public are too enlightened not to know that there may be quackery even in the Thomsonian practice, and that the signing a 5000 dollar bond will not confer skill in the administration of lobelia, and that an old established institution, sustained by its two or three thousand cured friends has little to fear from any new establishments under the particular patronage of Dr Samuel Thomson.

Samuel Thomson speaks of his frequent visits to me in order to a settlement of accounts. His visits were solely to persuade me to sign that singular bond. He cannot affirm with any color of truth that he has ever had any difficulty in a settlement of accounts with me. My refusal to sign this bond affords a solution to his otherwise unaccountable conduct.

INCESSANT PROFESSIONAL OCCUPA tion has prevented an earlier reply to Samuel Thomson's last publication under date of 11th May.

Amidst a mass of verbinge which has no bearing on the case, he states but two facts which he thinks ought to rain me in public opinion. One is the barrel of spice bitters—represented to be flour—the other, the having introduced into this community a Mr Empson, who turned out to be a bad man.

The object of Samuel Thomson's impudent search of my premises, was to discover whether I had manufactured any of his patent medicines.

He found one article of which he complained, viz—a barrel of bitters. Now, what will the public say when informed that Samuel Thomson was in my house at the time these bitters were preparing—saw the whole mixture—and said not a word against my making them. On this particular the public are referred to Mr John Wilbur, of Roxbury.

For want of room in the Drug store, (which he had previously inspected) this barrel of bitters was put into the store-room with barrels of flour, sugar, coffee, &c. This fact, it is not scange that I should have forgotten, nor that when the door was opened-I should reply to the question, "what is in those barrels?" flour, &c. This being the place for, and nearly filled with those articles. But he, having previously been informed by a spy, that the barrel of bitters was there, immediately put his hand into it, and triumphantly detects me in a lie. Now, why should I try to conceal from him an article which he had seen me make? Why conceal from him an article which he had seen me make? Why conceal from him an article which he had seen me make? Why conceal from him as lights? For it is not even mentioned in his book as his—it was hyented by his
